

Senior Project

By: Nicholas Kinder

The idea I want to do for my senior project is basically an audiobook. Obviously, this won't be a full-length book, but a whole chapter out loud, telling it from a first-person point of view. It will be about Vel (the main character) getting revenge for his brother's death, the moment before he gets his revenge and what's going on in his head after he gets his revenge. This chapter is going to be something I wrote myself. I will act out each part to show off my range and what I'm capable of doing for my post-college career. This is a sketch of the type of work I hope to do and it will help me create better stories about characters that people like and despise—that people can relate to and understand or empathize with. This idea merges my two dreams into one project, gives me experience and critical feedback to hone my craft in both fields so that I can be better as an actor and a better writer as well. I do have access to recording equipment outside of my phone as I do work at Midwest Family Broadcasting along with my dad, so I will be able to record with professional equipment and work on it with professional editing software as well to create something I can be proud of that I made from beginning to end.
